Hand a smartphone to a child, and he will find out how to use it to have fun in seconds. The fast development of technology means that children are becoming computer experts at a very young age. 31 Many of them have been using their computers at home well before they started school. As children are learning from a very young age about technology, they're taking big steps as they grow in being prepared for schooling, future careers and more. 32

However, there are some worries about how this tech influences childhood development. We are walking into unknown area as the generations past have never had this same kind of experience like them. 33 Some children even have their own smartphone, starting at a young age. Research shows that the average 8 to 10 years old children spend almost 8 hours a day in front of the screen, and older children and teenagers spend around 11 hours per day. 34

While many people see the bad influence of such technology usage, there are also bright side. The real question is what parents and teachers can do to make use of the technology in suitable ways, without letting children become slaves (奴隶) to it.

35 They can start by making sure children under two don't use screens. And they should make requirements including time limits, and model good smartphone use. What's more, they need to help children learn about computer science as part of technology used to give them chances for a bright future.

A. Some of them may even be able to help parents with their online work!

B. Parents and adults can help children get the advantages of technology in many ways.

C. Nowadays, almost every home has television sets, computers and phones for children to play with.
